

Rationale for CRC Changes Narrative

Because political science is rich in opportunities to be culturally responsive in many ways, I decided to focus on accessibility. My focus on accessibility is broad in scope and it includes making the course more accessible for:

- Students who use screen readers;
- Students with various learning styles, including auditory, visual and interpersonal;
- Students who are first-generation college students and/or identify as having English as a Second Language;
- Students with financial challenges;
- Students with heavy family and/or work obligations who need flexibility and a compassionate learning environment

Potential future changes include

- Offering extra credit within Canvas for students who complete their Comprehensive Student Education Plan [CSEP]
- Allowing multiple attempts on quizzes
- Adding more assignments focused on personal experiences
